OTIS SKINNER TO-DAY.

Romantic Actor at Academy in Rural Play—Bijou Bill.

French Canada is the little known and seldom explored region that is put within a footlight frame in the new play of "The Harvester," in which that delightful romantic actor, Otis Skinner, is to be seen at the Academy this afternoon and to-night.

With his accustomed conscientiousness, this sterling artist himself visited the Valley of the St. Lawrence during the past summer in order to study the French Canadian types at first hand and to secure the exact color and atmosphere for this production. He dwelt in the small hamlets of their toll in the wheat fields and at their play and ease in their cottages. All the costumes and accessories used in "The Harvester" were brought back direct by Mr. Skinner, and are not mere properties in the conventional sense, being the "real thing."

The central figure of the light-hearted and debonair play, Otis Skinner, who is portrayed by Mr. Skinner, is declared to be one of the most fascinating characterizations created in many seasons and the psychological transitions of character, which this care-free stroller undergoes in his redemption of a love folly committed in his youth, constitute this effective dramatic appeal.

Realistic Court Scene.

The plot in "The Factory Girl," which is the bill this week, turns on the attempt of Sallie French, forswoman in Hartman's factory, to convert Curlye, a ham employee, of the factory, into a married woman, by placing a missing key in the heroine's cloak pocket, and it was his evidence that she had moved the accused girl from conviction. The court scene at the trial is a realistic bit of work.
